(concerning foreign aid): “Foreign assistance programs, when administered correctly, can be a useful tool for our nation. Strong international allies with good infrastructures and governments that follow the rule of law help make the world a safer place. The United States has an opportunity through international aid programs to assist other nations in developing a strong and independent economy.”

Liz is a proud constitutional conservative and an advocate for a strong America. As a Fox News contributor, Liz has been a prominent national voice defending our constitutional rights and standing up against President Obama’s devastating policies. She is the co-founder of the Alliance for a Strong America, a non-profit organization based in Wyoming and focused on educating voters about the importance of American leadership and strength. She is the co-author, along with Vice President Cheney, of Exceptional: Why The World Needs A Strong America, published in 2015. Liz has practiced law and served in the State Department, including as the second-ranking official responsible for U.S. Policy in the Middle East. From 2009-2013, she was the chairman of Keep America Safe, a non-profit organization that was instrumental in preventing President Obama from transferring terrorists detained at Guantanamo—including the mastermind of 9/11, Khaled Sheikh Mohamed—into the United States. She is a member of the International Board of Advisors at the University of Wyoming and previously served on the board of Rivers of Recovery, a Wyoming-based organization that provides rehabilitation for military veterans through fly-fishing.

Liz’s family has called Wyoming home for four generations.
