Don Leonard is the son of a loving and heroic single mom. Growing up, he saw when all her resourcefulness and hard work wasn't enough to keep poverty and homelessness at bay. This childhood taught him the value of personal responsibility. But he also learned the importance of social safety nets and devoted public school teachers.

After college, Leonard spent two years with the U.S. Peace Corps in South America. He met his wife while he was a post-doc at Tulane University in Louisiana. The two of them would go on to teach at Ohio State. At Ohio State, Leonard has served as professor of city and regional planning.

Leonard is committed to fighting for an economy that is fair, prosperous, and sustainable.
