Denny Wells is a lifelong Alaskan and the son of an IBEW electrician. While attending the University of Alaska Fairbanks, he met his wife, Lisa, and the two later served together as Peace Corps Volunteers. They returned to Alaska and built their family in Anchorage, where they are raising their three children.

Wells first became involved in local politics during Anchorage's 2022 redistricting process. As a private citizen, he developed and submitted proposed maps, followed the redistricting process, and engaged with local leaders. One of his proposed maps was ultimately adopted by the Anchorage Assembly.

Since then, Wells has remained engaged in his community and focused on issues affecting Alaskan families and future generations. He has also spent time speaking directly with residents throughout the district about their priorities and concerns.

Wells' background includes community engagement, public service, and Peace Corps experience, and he is seeking to bring that perspective to the Alaska Legislature.
