Emily Hane has deep roots in Kansas and a longstanding commitment to public service and community. Her great-great-grandparents moved to Kansas shortly after the Civil War to continue their abolitionist work, and five generations later, much of her family remains rooted in the state.

After serving as a Peace Corps Volunteer overseas, Emily moved to Wyandotte County, drawn to the community's diversity and affordability. When she first became a resident of Wyandotte County, she lived in several apartment complexes throughout House District 31 before putting down permanent roots in Rosedale, where she found an affordable home in 2020.

Emily's professional career has focused on public service and nonprofit work, including efforts to expand access to education and safe water. As a community volunteer, she also advocates for affordable housing and tenant rights. Through this work, she has developed experience building coalitions, bringing people together, and staying focused on meaningful solutions.

As a nonprofit professional, Emily brings a collaborative, responsive, and solutions-focused approach to her work. She is running to serve the residents of House District 31 and bring her experience in community advocacy and public service to the Kansas Legislature.
